YANKEE FIELDERS COULD SHINE IN CRICKET GAME

English Fielders Are Slow in Comparison With Our Big League Baseball Players.

By DAVID L. BLUMENTHAL (United Press Staff Correspondent.) New York (By Mail.)—There are few Englishmen who ever have seen a ball game. They don't play ball in England. They play cricket—and that's just the difference.

Cricket is like baseball in one thing only, and that resemblance is in the fielding. The ball is much the same—maybe a cricket ball is an ounce heavier than a baseball, but the difference in speed of picking up a fast traveling ball between the English cricketer and one of our stars is like the flight of a swallow and a heron.

The American is amazingly fast. He always meets the ball. In England, the fielder chases it, and if by chance he should bring off a "catch"—the everyday fly which is invariably held by the American fielder—the crowd lose themselves in a mass of hat waving enthusiasm which almost equals the cheering of a Babe Ruth home run.

No Englishman who has seen a first rate ball game in this country will disagree with me when I say that a first-class team of ball players, trained a few months in the English batting style and minor technicalities of cricket, would more than likely beat a crack English cricket team—simply on account of their wonderful picking up and throwing in.

Of course, the American pitchers would not "take many wickets" at first. But there would be mighty few runs scored off those lynx-eyed fielders which make up the greater part of our star ball teams.
